Good news: Newsbank is displaying articles for today's Post-Dispatch at this hour, unlike earlier this morning. The fire wall may not exist, after all, in Newsbank.

Bad news: The West Lake article that broke this morning isn't listed.

Perhaps it will be in Newsbank tomorrow.

Just got a return call from the St. Louis Public Library reference desk. The article isn't in today's print edition. Hopefully, it will be in Newsbank tomorrow. If not, contact Cynthia in their geneology department at the downtown library at 1301 Olive Street (314-241-2288), and perhaps she can help somehow. I'm on annual leave tomorrow. She said the Post won't give that library an electronic subscription. Perhaps your public affairs colleagues at HQ know something.

Thanks.

This is all we get. Story is behind pay wall.

EPA head says decision on West Lake coming 'soon,' but gave no indication of how soon

WASHINGTON • Environmental Protection Agency Director Gina McCarthy said Monday her agency has done “extensive work” to safeguard residents near the nuclear-waste contaminated West Lake Landfill in Bridgeton, but she gave no indication of when a proposed “record of decision” on the agency’s cleanup plans for the site will be finalized.

McCarthy will be leaving the government after Donald Trump becomes president on Jan. 20. She spoke Monday at the National Press Club, where she tried to make the case that, despite environmental groups’ concerns that her Trump-appointed successor will deny scientific evidence that climate change is related to human activity, that the impetus for cleaner air, water and energy is too enmeshed in everyday lives — and too big of a part of the American economy — to be reversed.
